Not illustrated. 1821 Excerpt: . . . admitted as presenting an accurate picture of the ate of Jerusalem; and Mr. Buckingham adds his testimony to its general correctness. lie estimates the number of fixed residents at 8000, half of whom are Maboramedans; but the eottinual flux and reflux of strangers, brings the moveable population up to little less than 15, 000 at certain seasons of the year. No account which could be depended on as to the proportion of numbers in the different sects, was collected. The only trade consists in crucifixes, relics and cbaplets; large cargoes of which are regularly shipped to Italy, Spain, rat Portugal. The military force consists of about 1000 soldiers, Turks, Arabs, and Albanians, mixed together; the walls, with the natural position of the city, are enough to defend it against tumultuary attack; but it must easily fall before European approaches. We are convinced, from Mr. Buckingham's reasoning, of the identity of Mount Calvary; at least we see no reason for violently impugning the tradition of ages concerning it. He has, in our minds, satisfactorily answered the leading¹ objections against this hypothesis; and we can only wish. that be had done so without being uncivil to Dr. Clarke. At the close of January, Mr. Buckingham, in company with Mr. Baukes, commenced hisjourney to the east of Jordan; the first seeking Tiberias on the way to Damascus and Aleppo, the last intending to reach Nazareth; and both anxious to investigate the ruins of Jerash and Gamala. Two Arab guides, of the tribe of Zalians,...
